Joining nouns with の

の

Date _____

By the end of this part, you can:

- ☐ Join two nouns with の: a Japanese teacher, my company
- ☐ Say which one you mean, without a long sentence

A conversation you can have in Japanese

Tanaka	Is that a Japanese book?
You	Yes, it is my Japanese book.
Tanaka	Is your father a company employee?
You	No, my father is a doctor.

GRAMMAR 1

Joining nouns with の

の joins two nouns, and the one that owns or describes goes first: にほんご の せんせい is a teacher of Japanese, わたし の かいしゃ is my company. English runs the other way round, so read の backwards into English.

1 See how it works

PATTERN

A	(of) の no	B

A's B / B of A

I わたし watashi	(of) の no	bag かばん kaban	(polite) です desu

It is my bag.

Japanese にほんご nihongo	の no	teacher せんせい sensei	です desu

She is a teacher of Japanese.

Mr. Tanaka たなかさん tanakasan	の no	watch とけい tokei	です desu

It is Mr. Tanaka's watch.

2 Build the piece two nouns → A の B

Do each one the same way as the example. Write your answer on the line.

e.g.	わたし ・ かばん watashi ・ kaban I, bag	→	わたし の かばん watashi no kaban my bag
1.	たなかさん ・ ほん tanakasan ・ hon Mr. Tanaka, book	→	Mr. Tanaka's book
2.	にほんご ・ ほん nihongo ・ hon Japanese, book	→	a Japanese book
3.	かいしゃ ・ ひと kaisha ・ hito company, person	→	someone from the company

3 Say it in Japanese

1. This is my company.

2. My father is a doctor.

- ☐ Say it is not yours

A conversation you can have in Japanese

Tanaka	Whose pen is this?
You	It is mine.
Tanaka	Is this watch yours too?
You	No, that one is my older brother's.

GRAMMAR 1

Whose is it?

だれ の ですか asks whose something is. The answer drops the noun and stops at の — わたし の です, my one — because the thing is already on the table between you.

- ☐ Add よ, when you are telling someone something new

A conversation you can have in Japanese

You	This is your bag, isn't it.
Tanaka	Yes, it is mine.
You	The company is over there, you know.
Tanaka	Oh, thank you.

GRAMMAR 1

Softening and asserting

ね and よ are how a sentence is aimed. ね expects the other person to agree — you both know it already. よ hands over something they did not know. Leaving both off is neutral, not rude — and よ on every sentence starts to sound pushy.
